

San Francisco

Yogi
times™

lifestyle for the modern yogi ●●●●●
may issue 42

Women of Substance!

5 Inspiring
Conversations

Myths Of The Body Beautiful

Resistance
Letting Go And Moving On

Kids And ADHD
How Yoga Can Help

Plus +
Love Your Heart - Heart Health For Women
Light And Delicious Polenta Cake

Experience a new spiritual level of your practice and share that gift with your students. Ananda Yoga® is the only Yoga Teacher Training based on the Teachings of Paramhansa Yogananda, Gyandev McCord, a cofounder of the Yoga Alliance, and his expert staff will lead you through 28 days that will literally change your life.

Ananda Yoga Teacher Trainings are offered at 200 and 500 hour certification levels. We guarantee small classes and personal attention.

Located in Northern California's Sierra Nevada Foothills at The Expanding Light Retreat.

Call for your free Yoga Teacher Information packet.
800-346-5350

Or visit www.expandinglight.org

Upcoming Classes

Ananda Yoga® Teacher Training- Level I

July 2-30 and October 22 - November 19

Level II Classes

Advanced Pranayama

May 21-28

Yoga of the Heart® with Nischala Devi

May 25 - June 4

Restorative Yoga

June 15-18

Therapeutic Use Of Asanas

June 25 - 30

Meditation Teacher Training

June 23 - July 2

Prenatal/Postpartum Teacher Training

July 16-26

Essence of the Bhagavad Gita

July 30 - Aug 5

THE EXPANDING LIGHT
ANANDA YOGA AND MEDITATION RETREAT

14618 Tyler Foote Rd., Nevada City, Ca 95959

800-346-5350 or 530-478-7518

www.expandinglight.org

photography by jasper johal - jasperphoto.com

stopping the blood

by andrew assalian, lmt and dr. coleen murphy, nd

the use of arterial compression in yoga and thai massage

While attending a Bikram Yoga class and performing the wind releasing pose (pawanmuktasana) the instructor encouraged the class to hug their knees and bring them as close to the shoulders as possible while compressing the thigh against the chest. He explained that we were trying to stop blood flow into the leg, known in Bikram Yoga as the tourniquet effect. Why would we want to do that? After all, isn't yoga about increasing blood flow, warming the body with increased circulation and hyper-oxygenating our tissues? And by the way, what kind of wind are we trying to release here?

Stopping the blood flow into the limbs is a yogic practice that dates back over 2,500 years. As practitioners of traditional Thai Massage, we routinely stop the blood flow into the limbs by compressing the major arteries that feed the legs and arms. Thai massage originated in northern India approximately 2,500 years ago during the time of the enlightenment of Gautama Buddha. The practice of stopping the blood was first performed on monks who sat for hours on end in meditation. As you might have experienced, legs tend to "fall asleep" in meditation due to a lack of blood flow into the limbs. The physicians who tended to the Buddha and the surrounding Sangha developed a method to help restore and enhance blood flow to the legs of these marathon meditators. This technique called "stopping the blood" is still practiced today by practitioners of Thai massage and yogis and yoginis alike.

During a Thai massage, a skilled practitioner will apply direct pressure with their palms or feet to the femoral artery, located in the groin, or to the axillary artery, located in the armpit, to slow the blood flow into the legs and arms respectively. The length of the compression varies, usually 15-45 seconds, and is only done on healthy individuals - never on anyone with heart disease, high blood pressure or varicose veins. In yoga, many poses offer some degree of compression of these vital arteries, which Bikram includes in his pawanmuktasana series as well as shalabhasana (locust), a strong compressor of the axillary artery.

The benefits of stopping the blood, whether done as part of a Thai massage or a yoga practice, are numerous. Stopping the blood is a misnomer; it is really the practice of slowing the blood flow through the limb's primary artery and routing it to deeper, less frequently used arteries. By encouraging the body to build strength in secondary arteries, the body will build a stronger circulatory system. We can liken this to taking a back road when driving home on the freeway and meeting with heavy traffic. There are many ways to reach our final destination; we just have to learn alternate routes in case one is blocked. Can we strengthen an artery in this manner? Absolutely! Blood vessels contain muscles that help to pump and move the blood; their muscular layer is in the middle of the three layers that make up an artery known as the media layer.

Another benefit to stopping the blood involves detoxification and removal of stagnant blood. Although arterial blood flow decreases during a blood stop, venous return continues unimpeded. The suction of venous blood back towards the heart increases in the vessels of the limbs affected by the blood stop. Stagnant blood, which would ordinarily pool at the far ends of the limbs, is returned back into circulation. When the pressure on the artery is released, a rush of fresh oxygenated blood courses through the arteries, capillaries and veins, further removing stagnant blood and toxins that accumulate on the walls of the blood vessels.

In the Thai language, stopping the blood is translated as "opening the wind." The concept of wind here is likened to the vata dosha, which is responsible for the physical movement of the body. Stopping the blood and other aspects of Thai massage, such as assisted stretching, focus on releasing the wind in the body from where it has become stagnant.

So the next time you're kissing your knees, you can focus on your connection to an ancient tradition that is far more complex than expelling abdominal gas.

Andrew Assalian, CMT and Dr. Coleen Murphy, ND, are the founders of Natural Medicine Works, a San Francisco Bay area medical practice offering primary care naturopathic medicine and advanced bodywork. They have been teaching traditional Thai massage together for over ten years and recently began offering a weekly class on the Prana Touch method of Ayurvedic massage in San Francisco. natmedworks.com

Yoga Programs in Schools for Students and Teachers

Yoga Ed. Instructor Certifications

The Crossings: June 5-11

Shambhala: June 19-25

Esalen Institute: July 7-14

Yoga Ed. Studios LA: August 7-13

Yoga Works OC: August 11-27

Tools for Teachers for Classroom Teachers

Los Angeles: July 22-23 or August 19-20

Yoga Pretzels Family Workshop

Golden Bridge: Mother's Day May 14

Make a Living Making a Difference!

Thanks to our friends Exhale, Golden Bridge, Yoga Works

www.yogaed.com

CAROLINE MYSS LIVE

Entering THE CASTLE 2006 TOUR

In this all new lecture based on Caroline Myss's upcoming book, Entering the Castle, Caroline will offer serious instruction about the interior practice essential to working with the power of one's soul and how to direct that force into positive action.

SAN FRANCISCO

Argent Hotel

Sunday, August 6

10AM-5PM

Space is Limited—Reserve Today!

Call: 800-654-5126, or order
online: www.hayhouse.com

The Morning and Afternoon of Your Life

Presented by Dr. Wayne W. Dyer and Hay House

In this enlightening workshop, Dr. Dyer will explain both chapters of your existence—the Morning and Afternoon of Your Life. He'll show you how to make a graceful transition into a world greater than you could ever imagine and help you reconnect with your spirit.

SAN FRANCISCO

The Westin St. Francis Hotel

Saturday, October 21st &

Sunday, October 22nd

10AM-5PM

To reserve your seat call

800-654-5126, or visit

www.drwaynedyer.com

for more information.

www.hayhouse.com